Deborah Lambin is a working artist with over 40 years working in many art mediums including watercolor, printmaking, and sculpture. She loves pushing the envelope and being adventurous in trying new things. Currently she is a paper artist working with books. She took the book Black Beauty, carefully removed the pages and created a horse, leaping out of the spine. From this desire to create and see the story come to life, she, along with her daughter Rachel and son John-Henry, create one of a kind book art sculpture under MyThousandWords Book Sculpture. In 2019, they were commissioned to create the Artown publicity poster.

Lambin has taught her book art workshops in libraries, schools, and community centers from small rural towns to large metropolitan cities across the country. She has also taught on cruise lines during transatlantic crossings and in companies such as Kohler, Nestles USA, Prudential and more.

Lambin has a background in marketing/communications and graphic arts. She has worked in the business & corporate arena and as a substitute teacher. She resides in Carson City.
