Joylynn M. Ross is an award-winning author, editor, literary consultant, publishing coach and literary educator. She has more than 40 publications in print and has sold over three-quarters of a million books. Her published works include the “New Day Divas” series, If I Ruled the World, An All Night Man and The Root of all Evil. Her children’s book, The Secret Olivia Told Me, received an American Library Association Coretta Scott King Honor.

Ross uses her literary works as the foundation for her workshops and presentations to audiences from PreK through adults. She has worked with underserved urban populations, as well as children suffering from traumatic events. Ross has spoken in prisons, which has prepared her to assist those who are incarcerated or have been, with their writing and publishing journey.

Prior to entering the literary field, Ross was a paralegal. After thirteen years of being a paralegal, she formed a publishing company and published her own books until she landed a book deal with St. Martin’s Press. Now, as a literary professional for more than two decades, she considers herself an expert in the field. Ross shares her literary expertise at conferences, workshops, and summits across the country conducting writing and publishing workshops for aspiring, new and seasoned authors.

“I’m a steward over the messages being brought to me, and it’s my job to make sure that those stories and messages are relayed in excellence and become fruitful and multiply.”
