Paul is a self-taught artist. His introduction to the arts and painting began at an early age in elementary school and has become a passion of his that continues today. He began working with acrylic paints and then expanded to traditional oil paints. He has experience in canvas toning, maintaining color harmony, slight variations in tone, matching color, and the preparation of wood panels for outdoor presentations. Paul uses multiple steps when creating a painting; from creating a basic compositional sketch, considering color choice based upon the story that is being conveyed, and creating atmospheric conditions with the use of subtle washes of thinned color.

Being a self-taught artist, Paul is aware of how intimidating oil painting can be to students. He believes it’s important to approach teaching in a simplistic manner, to break down the painting process into basic colors, shapes, tone, and value which helps build a solid foundation. This approach also helps build confidence in his students’ abilities in knowing that adjustments in color, tone, and value can always be made without concern.
